

Dee And Deaw Adventure with ASEAN

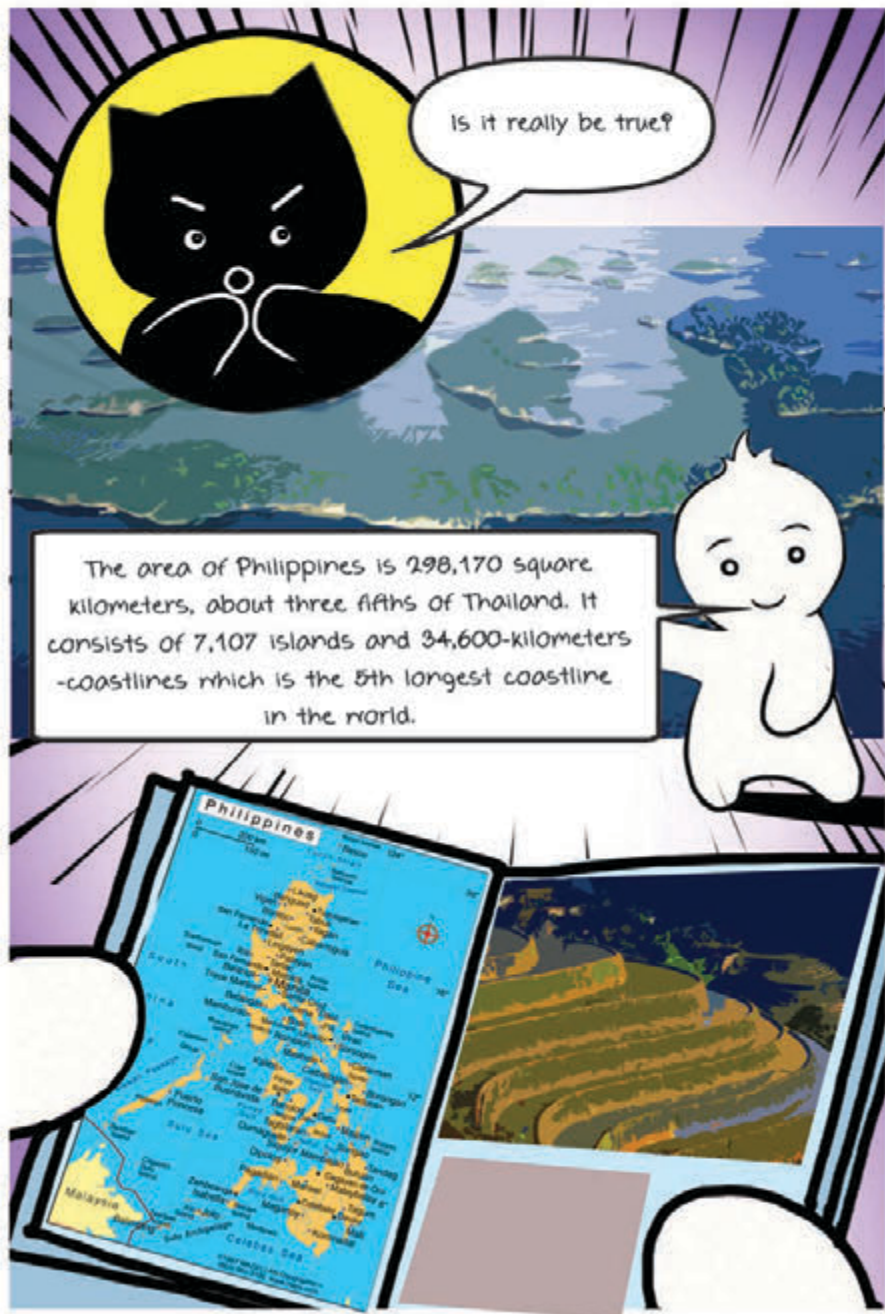

Philippines

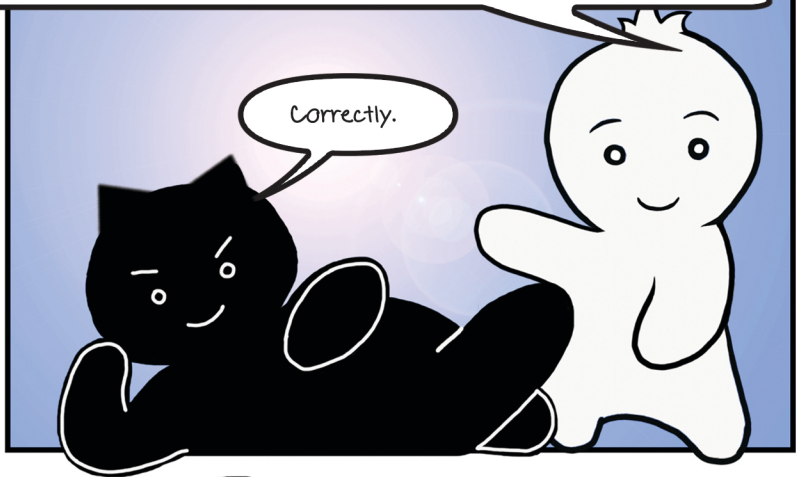

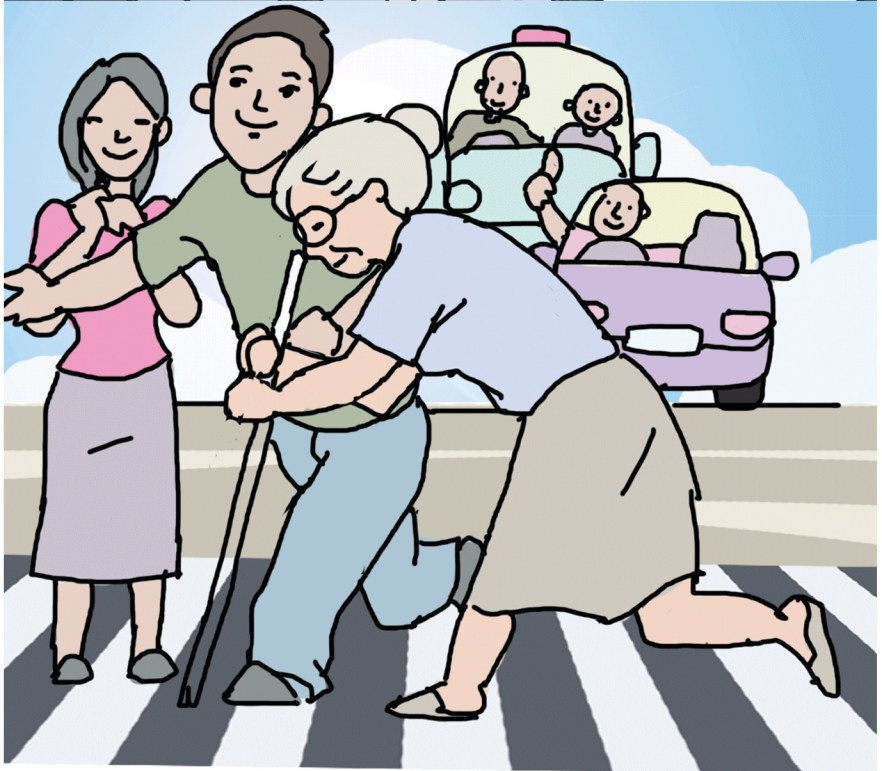

About religion. 92 percent of the population are christian, Roman catholic 83 percent and Protestants 9 percent, 5 percent for Islam and 3 percent for other.

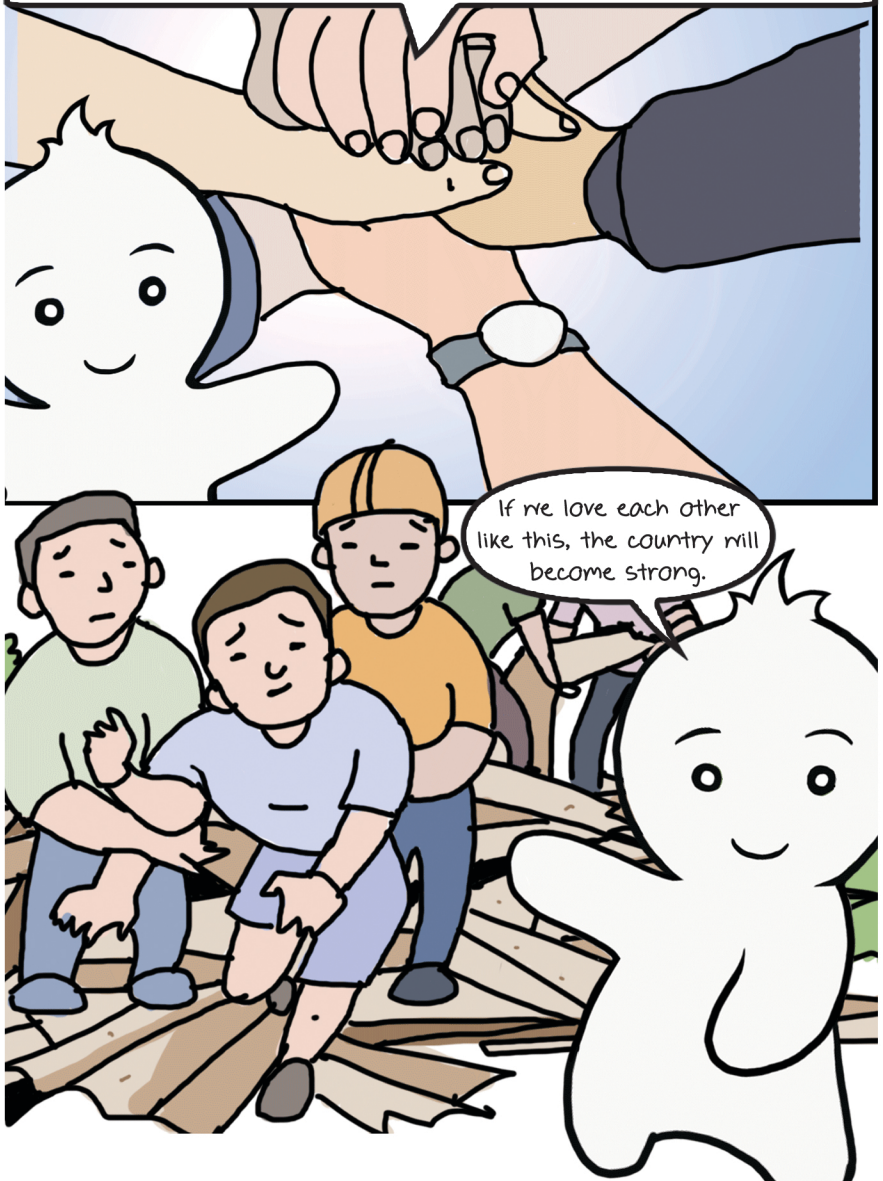

For the unity in the differences, Philippine people was taught one same thing, the importance of family. They specially value their family and relatives because they believe that happiness in society is the result from happiness in family, the strong country is the result from warm family.

Philippine people also receive good attitude from the religion they respect such as not doing bad things, rejecting corruption and thievishness, helping and caring other people like doing it to God.

Another distinctive point of Philippines is accepting others as they are even they are different in ethnicity, never look down on anyone because everyone is important

The Philippines has a democratic government with a presidential system. It is governed by Benigno S. Aquino III, the current and 15th president. The president was elected from the populace in the country and this position will end in 6 years. The senate contains 24 senators.

Most of Philippine people work overseas, so the main income of the Philippines comes from foreign land. Philippine people are usually educated so they can use their knowledge in improving international relations, publicizing Philippine technology to other country and increasing the Philippine income.

All of this means, Philippine treasure their family and relatives, they care about personalism, religion and spirit. They respect themselves and other people, and they also have economic security.
