Myanmar

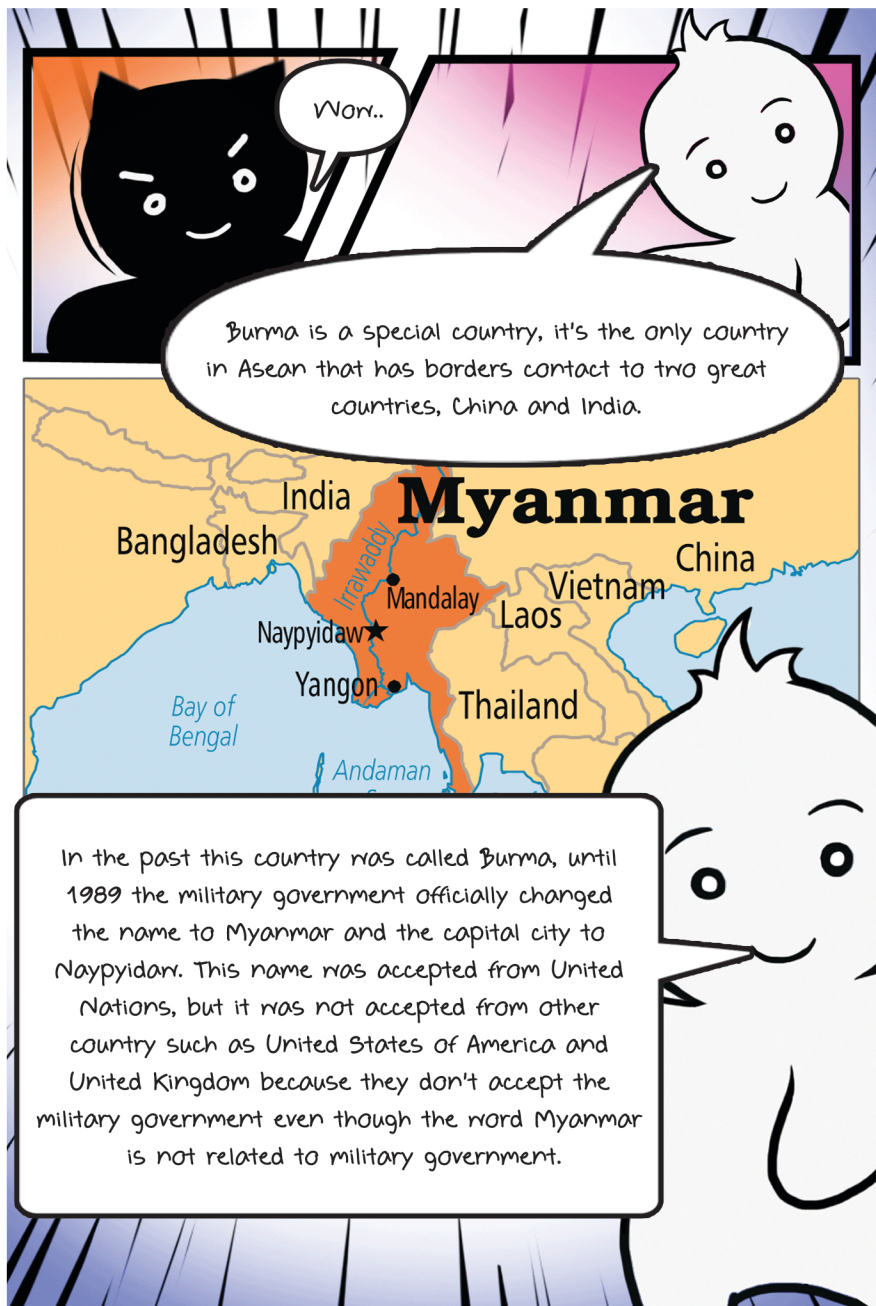

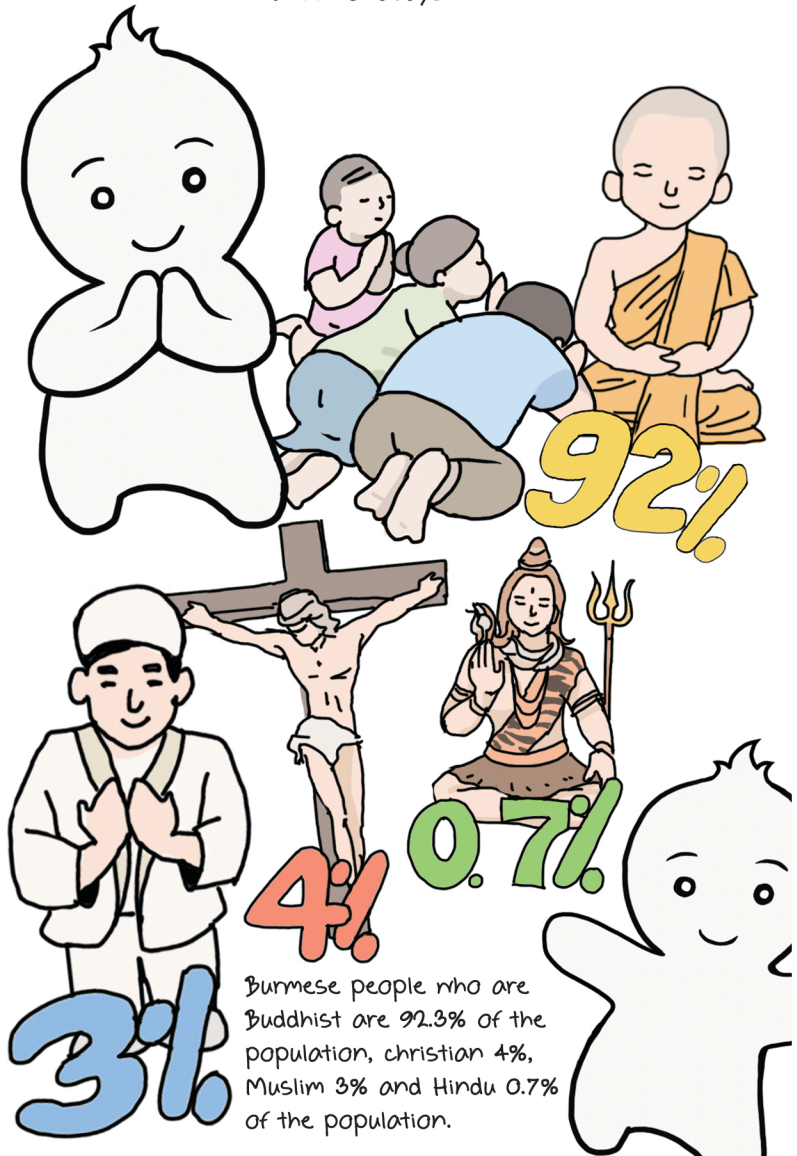

Yes, it is. You know, Myanmar, or Burma had lots of problems about politics and government for long time, and it just started to be solved. Burma had been in a cold war for many years, so the public utilities such as roads, electricity, water supply and transportation are terrible. Also, the Education in Burma is not good, not every children can go to school. In Addition, Burma was boycotted from other country because there were so much human right abusing. That's why, for taking care of their families. Burmese people come to work in Thailand.

However, the situation in Burma is getting better and better. More foreign investors are starting to invest in Burma. This country is going to be a lot different from before.

Burma and Thailand are similar in letting people choose their religion openly; still Theravada Buddhism is the official religion of the country. Buddhism came in Burma since the Buddha era and still be respected until nowadays.

Burmese culture was influenced by China, India and Thai, as you can see from language, music and food. Art in Burma was influenced by Theravada Buddhism.

Burmese people are seriously Buddhist, so Burmese men are more likely to become monk. On the important days of Buddhism, people in Burma will energetically do Buddhist activities at the temple.

They are SERIOUSLY Buddhist, you'll see teenagers not in the pub but the temple and children love Buddhist activities more than games.

Education is very important in Burma. There is a Buddhist phrase said "Suffering is the result from unknowing", so Burmese people care a lot about education.

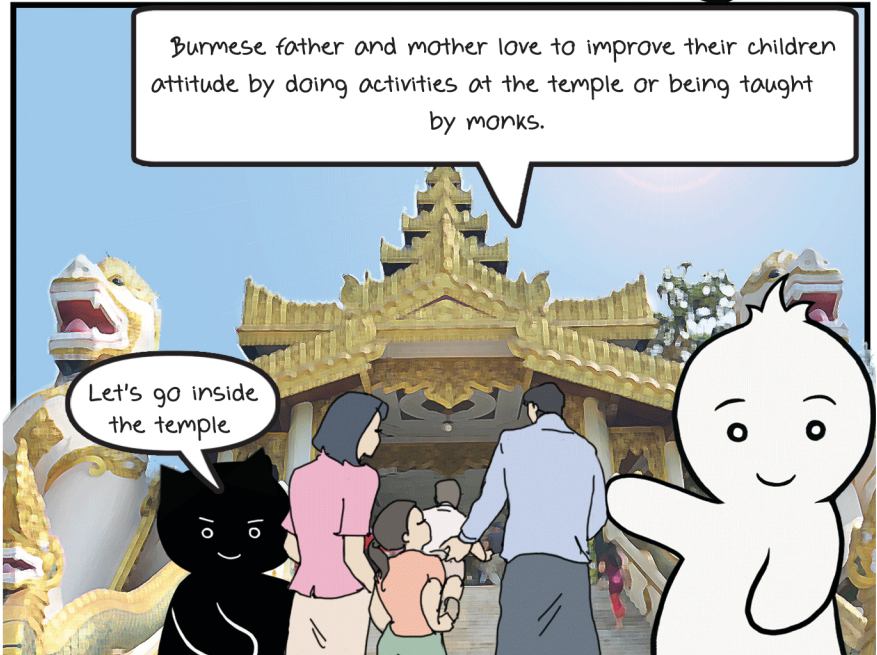

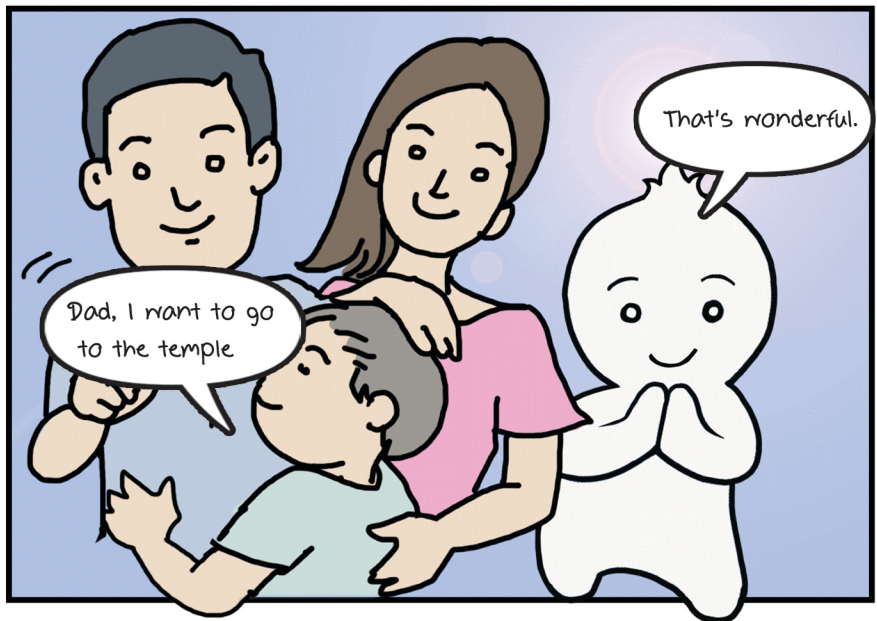

People in this country are also love helping, sharing, and supporting others. Some people volunteer to be a teacher for disadvantaged people.

Burmese lifestyle is according to Buddhist principle such as living carefully and supporting each other, so even in Thailand, Burmese people will live together and love one another.

Good news for Burmese people that their country is getting better, so they don't have to work in Thailand illegally and they can live with their family happily. With these good character of Burmese, unity and discipline, Burma is going to be a wonderful country for sure.
